“ this may be the last time i comment on this. in november of last year, it finally reached 10 years that you have been gone. but no matter the time that goes by, or the lack of words i say, i will never miss or love you less than i have since the day you left. i won't stop missing the cute nickname you called me, the times that you were always there for, cheering me on, how you gently held my head under the faucet to clean my hair, how we'd sit in your yard together; nothing. i will always miss you, even if with time goes the memories i can hold. in remembrance of you, i will live just to live; not for anyone else, but myself. i will live the life you helped nurture with gratefulness so all that time did not go to waste. and i will live and love the life that you should've had. i plan on moving to colorado in a couple years to start my brand new life, but the memory of you will always follow, and i will always think of how we could've sat on a rooftop and stared at those beautiful western mountains together. and maybe we might one day, maybe i'll feel the ghost of your love hold onto me again as i finally live the life you would have wanted me to when i stare into the sky and think about nothing but you. i love you grandma, i hope wherever you are, you're happier than ever.

“ your room used to always be so cold, you had a small bed that we shared with hemi whenever i came over. it was nice, i miss it. i miss waking up on the weekends, feeling the cold breeze from the fan, cuddling with you and hemi under multiple blankets. if i were to revisit my past, relive it all again, i would make sure to relive the ones i shared with you. you were the best thing in my childhood and nothing will change that, i love and miss you - so does everyone else.

“ I remember as a kid, you once cut my bangs and my mom was so mad at you. I've always loved having shorter bangs for that reason, it reminds me of you. I miss you, grandma, I hope you're well wherever you are. I still talk about you whenever I get the chance, everyone misses you so much and I wish you could see me now. I hope you would be proud of how far I've come.

“ *On Earth, like the flower, Rose, you were sown
To bring joy and beauty to all you have known.
And like the flower you flourished and grew
Into a wonderful mother and grandmother too.
At this time of sorrow and so many tears
We're blessed to have known you while you were here.
Memories will soothe our hearts all the while We'll feel your warmth, hear your laughter and see that wonderful smile.
Heaven's more beautiful now I suppose
Cause you're blooming there now, our precious Rose.*

Enjoy that Heavenly garden, Rosie.

“ Rosie always took the time to say "hello" and comment on whatever few posts I had on FB. I know she loved her family and was very proud of them. So tragic that she was taken so young.
