“ I was so sad to hear the new of Sandy's death. What do you do with 50 years of memories? Cherish them, I guess. I think half the "west side" was raised in the Martin household. So many memories: our sidewalk square on Westmoreland that marked our halfway point when we walked each other home, the scary drives to Grand Ledge, when Bill agreed to take us, the fun weekends either at the Martins or in Grand Ledge at Sue's, coffee at the doughnut shop, and all those times Greg had to drive the Fearsome Foursome around; his price for loving Sandy. When my first son got sick, Ronnie and Sandy stepped right up and took in my younger son until my mom could come and take over his care. When that son got sick in 2013 he found Sandy (his godmother) on Facebook, as always, Sandy was there to listen and to offer comfort. I'm sorry for all of us but particularly to the Martin family and to Sandy's boys, you have all suffered more loss than most families can bear. You are all in my thoughts and always in my heart. My world is a sadder place, knowing that Sandy is not in it.

“ Sandy bought me a bag of honey crisp apples years ago. Every year I would let her know when I bought a bag. We both loved them. She always called me Granny. When my husband was terminally I'll she was so thoughtful and concerned!

“ I was so sorry to hear about Sandy; sending my deepest sympathies to all of you. As I look at her picture and read the obituary, my mind wonders back in time to my high school days and all the time spent with your family. Your mom, God rest her soul, was a second mother to me; you all were my extended family. It's true what the older-folks told us back then, time flies faster as you get older. Cherish every minute with family and friends.

Sending love, hugs, and prayers,
Jodi (Wieferich) Barber (and Ken too!)
